Lockheed Window Corp., acting as the General Contractor, completed the 2008 renovations of the John Lyman Center for Performing Arts in collaboration with the architectural firm of Silver/Petrucci & Associates of Hamden, Connecticut.

The John Lyman Center is owned by the Southern Connecticut State University and strategically located on campus. The Center has many functions and serves the university community as a fine arts performance and education facility. At Lyman Center, you'll find cultural events of all types: music, dance, drama, and sometimes a bit of Broadway. In addition to amateur and professional performances, the Center hosts lectures, academic celebrations, classes, and exams. The Center facilitates hundreds of events each year.

The renovations consisted of 20 openings of combinations of 780 fixed and 750 project-out windows with applied exterior grids manufactured by Traco®. Also installed were 18 Fixed units, one single and 19 pairs of Alumicor 600B rugged wide doors with 3400 SF Series entrance frames, all with applied grids. All of the material was finished in PPG Duranar Sunstorm in Champagne Bronze color.
